

Leaving a legacy ... the gift of a lifetime

When making a will we all think about those closest to us - our family, our relatives and friends. But writing a Will is also a wonderful opportunity to remember others that they have suffered a great deal. Leaving a legacy can help make a world of difference to them.

How? By giving support, it means to be self-sufficient and to regain hope and self-respect. When you include the words 'ICA' in your will you are allowing that to happen. Legacies change lives for good. If you would like to know more about writing a will then please contact us for a free will making guide.

Anyone thinking of making a Will

The only certain way you can ensure that your estate and belongings go to the people that you want after you die is to make a Will.

This may seem like a common sense piece of advice, but it is estimated that between 55 - 60% of people die in this country each year without having settled their affairs by making a Will.

If you have not made a Will, it means that your family, at a time of bereavement, will have to cope with the additional burden of sorting out your estate. It is probably not something that you would do willingly - but, if you have not yet made a Will, or if it has not been updated for some time, you do run the risk of putting your family to unnecessary distress.

By making a Will and keeping it up to date you can be sure that your family has been properly catered for. It is then that you may also like to consider leaving a legacy to ICA, which, as you may know, provides support and assistance to thousands of people every year.
